

Only one comma!

As every year we made a Hepatica exhibition, this time there were also some colleagues with other special assortments. The plant lovers of the "special kind" strolled through the offered plants. One woman was amazed at the many liverworts on the tables. She had never seen so many different ones. She looked at the labels on which the variety name and other information were printed. Werner Hoffmann, the "Aurikelpabst", stood next to her and tried to tell something about the liverworts. The woman listened patiently and at the same time tensely until she discovered the numbers on the label and asked what they meant. Since it was a multi-digit number, she could not translate the meaning. Werner explained as a matter of course that it was the price of the plant. Now again the woman replied, completely bewildered, and where is the comma? It took a while of clarification that there were liverworts in almost every price range. She bought a normal blue one for little money and was happy about it.

Werner Hoffmann

Der „Aurikelpabst“

