

Just look not touch!

Spring 2016 at the plant market in Berlin Dahlem was the Berlin television to report on the market. The organizer told them that there was a stand with extraordinary liverworts. So the TV people came to the stand and admired the liverworts in their variety of colors and shapes. Of course they also looked at the prices and discovered the "splendid specimen" for 4800,-€ of the variety Shinku. Of course, this was reported on Friday and Saturday in the evening show. On the exhibition days then cousin Antje and I had to see to it that the valuable "treasure" was not unduly "molested". If we had taken only 1,-€ for each photo, we would not have had to sell anything else, but we were still supposed to take care of the other customers. It was once again an experience what reports in the press (TV) cause, in any case, we had our hands full. In any case, it was fun for the visitors and for us.

Translated with www.DeepL.com/Translator (free version)

